THE DOCTOR'S POST.

BY MR. CLIFFORD.

say, here's the new doctor come to see if you'll take a fancy to him.

I think ye could do better than buy him, sir; old Walter to the doctor.

Ye'll soon see how he jumped up, and stamp'd air' tossed his head when the baker laid his hand on him. It's quite clear, sir, he's ta'en a likin' to you, air' is pleased at the prospect of ye for a master. It's wonderfu' how much better a beast will do for one man than for another, especially ponyways. Have ye'er remarked that, Doctor?

Well, I cannot say I have, replied the Doctor, but it may be so.

It's the case, I can assure ye, sir, was the reply, as I daur believe Blossom wad dad to the person's side.
